Here's how green advocate Designer Pat Gaylor helps her clients ease into a greener lifestyle.

Pat Gaylor isn't out to change the world – just one living environment at a time. An interior designer for 25-plus years, Gaylor has always strived to create home spaces that provide an oasis from the static and noise of our increasingly hectic lives. "Creating a sheltering, nurturing earth-conscious environment that offers a much needed safe haven or home base is my ambition," says Gaylor.

Q. What plays the biggest role in creating the interiors that meet your eco-friendly vision?

A. My whole philosophy revolves around enjoying high quality, pure, clean, eco-friendly design and incorporating it into the lifestyles we live today. Playing the biggest role in creating these environments are products made with natural and sustainable materials, whether it's FSC-certified hardwood and bamboo flooring, non-toxic low VOC paint, or a hemp fabric pillow cover.

Q. Are the clients you work with open and accepting of using natural and sustainable products?

A. Most of my clients prefer and even advocate environmentally friendly materials, but stop short when they're inconvenient or expensive. So, my solution is to change things more slowly by helping my clients see that they can make a difference, and also enjoy a wholesome, natural living environment.
